>People have woken up to the reality that a printing press is not a replacement for a real economy
>So they've realised it's time to unload US bonds and US dollars
>But now everyone else wants to unload their bonds and dollars first >80% of burgers live is paycheck to paycheck and their prices for everyday goods are about to skyrocket
>Hey presto.... confidence is lost.... the music stops... and another fiat currency bites the dust.

I figure their plan to stablize it will be to shift everyone unemployed or on food stamps, welfare, etc.. onto a digital currency that the Fed will backup. When they shift certain monetary policy over to that digital currency they can stop injecting dollars into the economy and the dollar will stabilize. I think this is their 5 year plan right now. Create an emergency with the dollar and then push UBI/digital currency welfare as a solution.

Nah. It looks like you don't understand metrics you post.
Relative purchasing power is about inflation. It doesn't actually matter for normal people at all. It only matters to large scale cash hoarders and punishing those by inflation is actually good for the economy. Money must move around to make the economy work, not be hoarded in a pile.
DXY is index relative to other developed currencies like Euro, Yen, Pound, etc. That's quite stable.
But trade-weighted US dollar index is a bit more interesting actually because it also includes currencies like China which matter for the trade balance and general global competiveness of the US economy. That index could actually be argued to be too high and thus making the US export economy uncompetitive.

Oh like no event that causes it just cumulative events over years.
I knew this was in serious trouble when the repo markets failed in septemeber of 2019, and the response was to print started with 50b a night ended with 1.2 trill a night just balance banks books to meet the reserve requirements
From September to March 2020 when covid lockdown hit.

That's when the fed change the rules and ended reserve requirements
>As announced on March 15, 2020, the Board reduced reserve requirement ratios to zero percent effective March 26, 2020. This action eliminated reserve requirements for all depository institutions.
https://www.federalreserve.gov/monetarypolicy/reservereq.htm

So they just keep printing and changing rules as it fails.

I've seen it happen before, the players in this game will never allow things to reflect reality. Don't get me wrong you can make money with bitcoin, gold, silver, but it will never reflect their true value in a free market.

I'm worried an even bigger step will be necessary to stablize the dollar though, like them passing a law in congress re-designing property rights for the entire country. Maybe some kind of mortgage rejection clause that allows banks to end your mortgage agreement and reclaim the property in a forced buy out. They could bolster security this way by reclaiming a massive amount of assets under the pressure of some impending economic disaster they are threatening everyone with in the news. Those that already own property outright have no issues... welcome to the noble class! Those that are still paying them have their mortgages cancelled and replaced with "20 year termed lease" or 50 years, etc... but whatever it is you don't actually own the property anymore, you are just renting it.

There is already precedent for this in American in Hawaii and a few other states where they lease land instead of selling it.

The currency switch over alone won't be enough. There won't be enough left over security or trust in the dollar. They will have to bolster it with some real world collateral = the US real estate market.

If there was ever a challenge the reserve status of the US dollar, not that this bitcoin ponzi is a serious challenge, or even a poor one, but if there was a challenge, the US government would simply outlaw it.

>But its an international currency

US trade sanctions would cripple any country that used an outlawed crypto.

Eminent domain and property taxes mean that you never owned your property anyway. The government always reserved the right to buy it back at a price they determined using unilateral power.

There are ways to really own land in some select areas, but honestly I think if they were widely known than the laws that allow for it would be closed off. Basically its an insider secret for the extremely wealthy.

I don’t think so honestly.
Under previous administrations we saw the military strong arm the dollar as the top currency. Under trump, this was slowly eroding. I understand his goal was transitioning our economy into a global exporter to revival China, but that would take more than 1 term. Hell, probably three. Obama expanded the military covertly. With Kamala outing herself as another Israel lapdog with thirsty eyes on the Iranian “regime”, I see more of the Obama era of world control coming.
Trump seems to have a goal of world control with product and goods. Obama cronies, military holdings.
The dollar will become more common place in a digital fashion. They’re literally just going to modify ones and zeros rather than print paper, all the while telling other countries to fuck off, because well we have tomahawks. This will become the one world zog currency.

Bitcoin is a global consensus that updates about every 10 minutes 2nd layers are instant settlement with some trade-offs.

Not really, because that is only re-organization not new production, new generation of wealth. The main problem is that the age of Columbus, as I call it, meaning the last 500 years, was a boon of expansion as Europe and conquered and developed North and South America. Now that age is over and it's death is being quickened by the internet and convergence of information, software automation, etc... they are the new era we are entering into now. I think what Bill Gates and the other billionaire/CIA/5-eyes bilderberg skull n bones whatever you want to call them globalists all realize is that our rate of expansion and consumption cannot be maintained. I've travelled all 50 states of this country, most of them in the last 10 years, and most normies don't understand that most everything everywhere is developed. This is why the only expanion you see is us dropping oil rigs in the arctic ocean and in northern canada, because that's all that's left to do.

We just can't sustain our current rates of economc growth anymore, not unless we expand into space, which we can't and arent' ready for yet.

Maybe aliens are real tho? Otherwise the future is going to suck.

You've made a smart post so I'll give a good answer as to why there may be a digital dollar or some other currency but it will not be Bitcoin.

If you go through history you will see it is full of technological revolutions to do with infrastructure. Canal transport was one. Then rail. Then fiber optics. Now blockchain.
Implementing any new infrastructure on a large scale takes a shit ton of investment money.
Now here is how the game works: early investors fund the development of this new technology and dedicate a lot of their efforts to bring in outside investment. At first those will be wealthy investors of the usual sort, but as the new infrastructure gets laid down and more money is needed, they need to draw from a larger pool of investors. So hype begins to surround the company (let's use Worldcom as an example) and more and more investors are brought in, buying at much higher levels. Soon the hype is so big - can't be wrong investing in fiber optic lines, the whole internet depends on them! - that grandma and the grocery store clerk are buying in.
Then, once all the infrastructure has been laid down, the earliest investors cash out to maximize their return.
Then all of a sudden accounting fraud is discovered. Or something else that triggers panic selling where before there was panic buying. Grandma and the store clerk and those who bought near the top lose everything, only insiders and early investors got rich. The price crashes, and those same ones that got rich now buy up all the assets at pennies on the dollar.
These bubbles are inflated and deflated deliberately so that normies are the bagholder, and paid most of the real costs in laying everything down.

>I understand his goal was transitioning our economy into a global exporter to revival China
It can not work like that actually. The problem is that to be global exporter someone actually have to be global importer.
European Union can't be global importer because they suck at consumption stimulation for a lot of political reasons.
China can't be global importer because they want to be global exporter.
Japan is too small and too old to be global importer.
Africa, Latin America, and India are too poor and undeveloped to be global importers.
Russia is both too old, too small, and too poor to be global importer.

The US is pretty much the only country that has the demographic, political, and economic capacity to be global importer. But being global importer sucks because it destroys industrial capacity and over develops financial capacity.
The only way the US could try to reverse that is through something like the Marshall Plan, where foreign markets are developed politically for the US products in a pretty much imperial system. But that's freaking unbelievably hard to sell politically to the public.
